Way Up North Two Time Winner in Beverly Hills

A new short film from the people in the far north.

ANCHORAGE, AK. - Crooked Pictures is proud to announce that Way Up North, an Alaskan inspired story that steers far from igloos and sled dogs is a two time winner at the 2009 Beverly Hills Film Festival. Honored for "Best Editing" and "Jury Award for Best Short Film" Levi A. Taylor and team became the toast of Beverly Hills. Sometimes when there's no question of betrayal, a little mayhem is the only answer...

Way Up North is a whimsical tall tale about betrayal and revenge set in the last frontier. Local director Levi A. Taylor brings a community of over 150 ambitious Alaskan artists together to experiment with a unique brand of storytelling. Featuring the musical stylings of Anchorage's own Rebuttals, Way Up North will have you tapping your feet to every unspeakable act and leave you grinning for more.

Dedicated to independent filmmakers, the BHFF creates a wonderful screening environment allowing participants to feature their films in the highest quality venues available to consumers around the world. Professionals and industry tastemakers representing all facets of the movie industry have been spotted attending year after year.

Designed to bridge the world of premiere independent cinema with the renowned city of Beverly Hills, the BHFF welcomes over 20,000 attendees annually who congregate for 5 days of screenings, poolside celebrity panels, special events, seminars, VIP after parties and deal making.
